The House Next Door
From our House to Yours...

A few words from our CEO,
Jennifer Nadelkov

Over the last few months we have been awakened to the current racial inequity in our society. We mourn, not only George Floyd, but all black lives that have been lost in altercations with law enforcement officials or community intolerance. Sadly, the present racial tension is not something new. It is the most recent manifestation of a relationship as old as the history of our nation, one scarred by the tragedy of human slavery. We are more than 50 years after the March on Washington, yet the work to heal the trauma of hundreds of years of racial injustice remains to be done.

The wounds of division in our country have come to a boiling point and we have seen eruptions of anger. We are watching protests around our nation with a resounding request to be heard. We all have a personal responsibility to listen. Until we take time to listen, we will not have an opportunity to understand and remove the obstacles that impede the rights and opportunities of Black Americans. As we work to gain understanding we can use our voices and influence to pursue and require equality, equity and racial justice.

To all of our HND family, community members, stakeholders and partners, you are heard. You are seen. You are valued. Our agency and our community is stronger because of our diversity. As an agency we are committed to ensuring our staff, clients and community are nurtured and empowered for their uniqueness, diversity and culture.
The House Next Door Family Foundation

It was early 2002 when the beginning of The House Next Door Family Foundation (HNDFF) became a reality when long-time HND agency advocates Jon Davies, Joe Master (2008), and Ann Grell had a vision to endow the missing administrative cost elements found with issued grants and contracts. Today the HNDFF, a public support organization for only the House Next Door, was created to preserve for years to come the agency’s efforts in nurturing families – building communities. The successful growth of the foundation’s assets over the years is the combination of donor gifts and prudent investing. The foundation’s strategy of building a substantial everlasting legacy is centered on using a portion of the foundation’s earnings and confidently never principal to meet the agency’s economic needs to fulfill the mission.

Over the years the foundation’s donors have given in several different ways other than outright cash gifts. Some of the most popular ways of planned/deferred gifts are:

♦ Qualified IRA Charitable Distributions
♦ Named Gift through Wills
♦ IRA: Designated as the Beneficiary a Named Gift to Foundation
♦ Designated as the Beneficiary of Existing Life Insurance
♦ Appreciated Securities (e.g. Stocks)

Many people are surprised to learn that the gifts they make to the foundation, may also bring personal financial benefits. To encourage philanthropy, federal law provides donors a number of tax breaks for charitable gifts, depending on the type of asset donated and the giving method the donor chooses. Because of the complexities involved, the advice and guidance of trained, experienced tax, legal, and other financial professionals is highly recommended.
Employees of the Month

Congratulations to all of our Employees of the Month!

Talking to your children about race

We interviewed two Moms about talking to their children about racial equality and issues involving race to get their thoughts on this topic.

A Black Mom’s Perspective

Q: How early should parents start the conversation with their children? In your opinion, is there a too early or too late?

A: I feel that parents should start as early as children noticing the difference in people. Kids as young as six months old can recognize race-based differences, according to an article by the American Academy of Pediatrics. And between the ages of two and four, children begin internalizing racial bias. Children are going to notice differences in people as early as six months old. It's up to the parents to not ignore or disregard the child's questions or observations, but to embrace them and acknowledge that people are different while also pointing out similarities of all humans. It is never too late to start a conversation about race because every day is a learning experience and the world is forever evolving and no matter how much time has passed, racism will always be alive in some form.

Q: Do you prefer to talk to your children in a group, or speak with each child individually?

A: I prefer to speak to them in a group, but afterwards talking to them individually just in case they have thoughts or feelings that they didn't feel comfortable discussing in front of their siblings. I feel that it depends on the age, mental capacity and maturity level of the child. For my daughter that is in elementary, we read some books, then have discussions about what we read, what she feels and thinks. For my high school and newly graduated sons, we watch the news and documentaries and have discussions on various topics related to racial injustice, we discuss our feelings, fears and hopes for the future. With my older sons, we discuss real life experiences that we have encountered, what could have been the outcome and how it made us feel.

Q: Any final words of advice/wisdom or experiences that you would like to share?

A: It is ok to not have answers for particular questions that your children may ask. It is ok to say, "I don't know". This is a learning experience for us all. I feel that being as authentic and transparent with your children are the main ingredients in talking about racial injustice. I think that as parents if we identify and acknowledge our own racial bias, it makes it easier to talk to our children about racial injustice. Sometimes parents feel that just because they were raised with certain beliefs/bias that they have to pass along those beliefs/bias to their children; that is incorrect. As parents you have control over what you teach your children and how they perceive the world. It's easier to love and learn from each other than to hate each other because the hate you teach little infants, eventually hurts us all. “...No happiness can be built on hate.” Josephine Baker
A White Mom’s Perspective

Q: Why is it important for ALL parents to have a conversation with their children about racial bias and race relations?

A: This is the lived experience of parents of color, but I think as white parents we need to be challenged to discuss race with our children. I keep seeing the lovely sentiment that kids are not born racist; racism is learned. I believe that is true, but it can also be a trap that says if I don't teach my child to be racist, she won't be. I think that is wrong. Just like every other difficult topic, if you aren't teaching your child about it, they are learning about it somewhere else. And in a society where racism is built into the very structures of our country, they are learning, at best, passivity and acceptance of racism. It is our job to actively teach our children to be anti-racist. We can and must have age appropriate conversations.

Q: How do you talk to young children?

A: It isn't always a direct conversation. First, I try to be conscious of how white privilege infiltrates society and how segregated we still are. It is easy for my kids' cartoons, toys, books, friends and classmates to look like them, but that isn't an accurate reflection of our world. So, I choose the school with racial, religious and economic diversity. I buy the doll with a different skin tone, and books that prominently feature people of color. I hope by changing what they see, I can change how they see the world. However, my preference is also to start directly discussing race very young. Those early conversations usually come from their books and are about people treating other people differently based on their skin color. Young kids are naturally very empathetic and are usually outraged at the injustice of being treated differently. I keep this simple. By 5 or 6, they are learning more about our racial history in America and I begin to be more specific about racial inequality, our national history and the current problems in our society. My daughters have had a lot of questions, and I answer them as honestly as I can or offer to look for information if I don't know.

Q: Any final words of advice/wisdom or experiences that you would like to share?

A: I think my biggest piece of advice is to educate yourself first. This doesn't have to be an overwhelming commitment - just seek out the information. By spending a little time making sure you have a competent grasp of history and the current status of race in America, you will be much more prepared for these conversations. And then I would say, don't get so caught up in doing this "right" that you don't do it at all. There's no perfect conversation, and it is not a one-shot deal. "I don't know, but let's see what we can find about that" and "you know, I gave you an answer earlier but thinking about it more I want to change it" are both things my kids have heard from me more than once.
Meet your neighbors, The House Next Door Family!

Meet Joyce Cox, Lead Administrative Assistant

I really enjoy working for The House Next Door. Every day is another opportunity to help someone in the community with either counseling or giving information for the health care card. I am always amazed by the staff and management I get to work with. They are the best of the best. The House Next Door truly lives up to its mission statement: To nurture and empower families to help build stronger communities.

Meet Linnette Reyes, WVHA Enrollment Specialist

I'm an enrollment specialist for the WVHA program. I love working for The House Next Door, because I'm able to help those in need, especially with their medical needs and with the staff I work with makes me feel like part of an actual family.

Meet Kyla LaPerriere, School Based Counselor at DeLand Middle

I'm a school-based counselor at Deland Middle and I love working for the HND because I love my clients. Being a safe person in their life is a treasure to me! At the HND I am able to teach kids (and sometimes their parents) that they are heard, they are loved, and they are worthy of greatness-- that to me is priceless.

Meet Vanessa Ruiz, WVHA Health Card Specialist

WVHA Healthcard Specialist. I am a health card specialist for the WVHA. I like working at The House Next Door because they are family focused on strengthening families in our community through the many different services it provides.

It’s Back to School Time

We know that it is difficult to decide on the right back to school plan for your family. Here is an overview of all of the schooling options offered by both Volusia and Flagler County School Districts as well as some resources with useful information.

Volusia County School District

Start Date: Monday, August 31, 2020 | Website https://www.vcsedu.org/reopening-roadmap

Option #1. Traditional Classroom Setting (as directed by FLDOE) with Health & Safety Guidelines
Students will be in school five days a week, as directed by the Florida Department of Education, with health and safety guidelines in place.
- Learn at school
- Receive face-to-face lessons
- Follow standard bell schedule
- Health & safety guidelines in place

Option #2. Volusia Live (real-time live streaming) with Student's School of Enrollment (FLDOE approved)
This option has been approved by the Florida Department of Education. Students will remain at home but follow the same daily class schedule as their classmates who are in traditional school. Students will participate in classroom instruction by logging in on a device, and engaging with their teacher and classmates virtually, by using platforms such as Zoom or Teams (real-time live streaming). These students are expected to log in and out on time for class every day. They are also expected to engage in classroom activities. Attendance will be taken.
- Learn at home
- Receive online face-to-face lesson in real time
- Curriculum and seat time mirror traditional classroom

Option #3. Enhanced Volusia Online Learning
This is an at-your-own pace, virtual option that has been available to VCS students for years. Volusia County teachers provide instruction in flexible formats. There is not a set schedule. Extra-curricular activities and clubs are available. Enrollment ends July 31, 2020. Please visit volusiaonlinelearning.com for more information.
- Highly qualified LOCAL Volusia County Schools teachers
- Offering full- and part-time options for students in grades K-12
- Year-round enrollments for part-time virtual courses
- VCS public school with academic advisement, college planning, advanced courses offered (Advanced Placement, Honors, Dual Enrollment)
- Complete lessons accessible online – anywhere, anytime
- Standard school year calendar, with a commitment for a minimum of one full semester recommended
- Fully accredited, NCAA approved
- Approved school variances will continue to be honored
- K-12 full- and part-time virtual opportunities for all students
- Local faculty and staff for unprecedented availability
- Community support
- Year-round part-time enrollments
- Multiple platforms to meet students’ needs
- Diverse course offerings
VCS to Allow Shortened Schedule for Qualified Seniors

Volusia County Schools strongly believes that all students can achieve and be successful. A seven-period day provides the opportunity for students to graduate college and career ready. Due to the COVID-19 situation, Volusia County Schools is working with high school seniors to allow a shortened schedule for the 2020-2021 school year, if they qualify. To be eligible to participate in the shortened school day for this school year, students must meet the criteria listed in the parent contract. Some of the requirements are as follows:

- Students MUST be classified as a senior in good standing.
- Students MUST have a cumulative unweighted GPA of a 2.50 or higher.
- Students must meet a variety of requirements to be College and Career Ready.
- Students must have a passing score on all graduation-related testing requirements or provide state-approved waiver.
- Students must have the minimum credits needed for graduation.
- Students MUST participate in at least four courses on campus.
- Courses selected MUST be in sequential order. For example, periods 1-4 or 4-7.

Please contact your school counselor to see if you qualify for this special exception.

All volunteer work begins the way I began my service on the board of HND—because someone M.A.D.E. me do it. Steve Sally, then the head of HND, MENTORED, ASKED, DIRECTED, AND ENCOURAGED me to get involved. Of course, as a family law collaborative lawyer and mediator, the mission of HND aligns beautifully with my professional and personal goal of helping every family that I work with while not causing further trauma. I often referred clients to HND before becoming a member of the board, so I knew of the good and important work that was being done by the organization. I am grateful to be able to help ensure, even in a small way, that the good work continues, even in the midst of this unprecedented time. Now, perhaps more than ever, the work done by the HND is essential. As President of the board, I will do all that I can to enable HND to continue to do its work, to realize its short term goals and to continue to make progress on its long term goals.

We would also like to offer our sincere thanks to all of 2018-2020 Executive Board Members for your years of service to The House Next Door!
